though we are aware that there are other populations that are in great need, the quality-of-life indices for Black Californians continue to decrease. Our life expectancies are decreasing. Our unhoused population is increasing. Our health outcomes continue to be the worst.

We're not asking anyone to choose one group to prioritize. We are saying, though, in addition to your investments into our immigrant brothers and sisters – or our religious brothers and sisters – we are also asking you to uplift the needs of Black Californians. That way, all of us can move forward together.

What inspired you the most over the last year?

I've always been amazed by the joy of Black women in the midst of crisis.

That is really our secret sauce. We don't let the current state of any issue take our joy from us. It may break us a little bit. We may get tired a little bit. But we find ways to express that – through the arts, through music, through poetry.

What is one lesson you learned in 2025 that will inform your decision-making next year?

Reset. It's so important not to be sitting still. We have a new administration. We're seeing data showing that Black women have the largest unemployment rate. We've lost so many jobs. We can have rest – we can be restful – but we have to continue the resistance.

In one word, what is the biggest challenge Black Californians faced in 2025?

Motivation.
I choose motivation because of the tiredness. What is going to motivate us to be involved in 2026?
What is the goal you want to achieve most in 2026?
I want to get Black Californians in spaces and places of power and influence – as well as opportunities to thrive economically, socially, and physically.

der Scott's direction, the Black Rep has nurtured actors, audiences, and community members. It comes as close as theater can to being a true community center.

Despite setbacks—including a recent act of vandalism—the theater has endured. Under Scott's leadership, it continues to demonstrate that Black theater, like the Black church, remains vital to preserving community.

That's award worthy.

Ann Lowe: The Quiet Genius ...

1930s, she designed gowns for high-society women in Florida and New York, operating boutiques and working for prestigious department stores. Her reputation for craftsmanship, originality, and elegance grew increasingly. She was known for creating gowns that moved beautifully, featured delicate hand-made flowers, and looked sculpted rather than sewn. Many wealthy clients specifically requested “an Ann Lowe gown” for weddings, balls, and galas.

Her most famous creation came in 1953: the wedding gown worn by Jacqueline Bouvier when she married Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy. The dress – crafted from ivory silk taffeta with dozens of tiny, pleated rosettes – became one of the most photographed bridal gowns in American history. Despite this achievement, Lowe received no public credit at the time. When a flood destroyed her completed gowns 10 days before the wedding, she Advocacy Masterclass Series, which now includes focus areas such as economic empowerment, maternal health, mental wellness, educational equity, and legislative strategy. In addition, we continue to grow the DWJ Public Policy Fellowship Program, which proudly celebrated its 10th anniversary this year.

What frustrated you the most over the last year?

The ongoing political gaslighting of Black communities – especially Black women – has been deeply frustrating.

What inspired you the most over the last year?

The unstoppable power of Black women at the grassroots and her seamstresses worked day and night to remake everything – at her own expense. Her dedication and perfectionism never wavered.

She eventually opened “Ann Lowe Originals,” her own salon on New York's Madison Avenue. She served clients such as the Rockefellers, DuPonts, Vanderbilts, and actresses like Olivia de Havilland. Yet even with her wealthy clientele, she struggled financially, often undercharging because she wanted every dress to be perfect, even if it meant losing money.

Lowe's contributions were finally recognized later in life. Today, her exquisite gowns are preserved in museums, including the Smithsonian National Museum of African American History and Culture and the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

In the last five years of her life, Lowe lived with her daughter Ruth in Queens, N.Y. She died at her daughter's home on Feb. 25, 1981, at the age of 82, after an extended illness.

level continues to inspire me. From mothers advocating for educational equity at school board meetings to young leaders pushing for housing and climate justice.

What is one lesson you learned in 2025 that will inform your decision-making next year?

“Capacity before campaign.”
You can't sustain bold ideas without building internal infrastructure.

In one word, what is the biggest challenge Black Californians faced in 2025?

Displacement.
Whether it's housing, jobs, education, or political representation – Black Californians are being pushed out, priced out, and too often left out. Reversing this trend requires unapologetic advocacy, bold policy shifts, and the political will to center those most impacted.

What is the goal you want to achieve most in 2026?

To secure a full slate of Black women candidates in key state and local elections – and win. That includes building out a robust BWOPA political leadership institute, developing a campaign war chest, and forging statewide coalitions to shift power from protest to policy.

Support Your Child's Mental Health

healing through sports, art, music, and therapeutic camps.
• Initial joint behavioral health visits, where a mental health provider and child welfare worker meet with the family early in a case.
• Child welfare liaisons in Medi-Cal health plans who help caregivers and social workers get services for children faster

Keeping Kids Safe from Opioids and Harmful Drugs

DHCS is also working to keep young people safe as California faces rising risks from opioids and counterfeit pills. Programs like Elevate Youth California and Friday Night Live give teens mentorship, leadership opportunities, and positive outlets that strengthen mental well-being. Through the California Youth Opioid Response, families can learn how to avoid dangerous substances and get treatment when needed. Song for Charlie provides parents and teens with facts and tools to talk honestly about mental health and counterfeit pills.

DHCS also supports groups like Young People in Recovery, which helps youth build skills for long-term healing, and the Youth Peer Mentor Program, which trains teens with lived experience to support others. These efforts are part of California's strategy to protect young people, prevent overdoses, and help them make healthier choices.

Support for Parents and Caregivers

Children thrive when their caregivers are supported. Through CalAIM's vision of whole-person care, Medi-Cal now covers dyadic services, visits where a child and caregiver meet together with a provider to strengthen bonding, manage stress, and address behavior challenges. These visits may include screening the caregiver for depression or anxiety and connecting them to food, housing, or other health-related social needs, aligning with CalAIM's Community Supports framework. Notably, only the child must be enrolled in Medi-Cal to receive dyadic care.

Family therapy is also covered and can take place in clinics, schools, homes, or via telehealth, reflecting CalAIM's commitment to flexible, community-based care delivery.

Additionally, BrightLife Kids offers free tools, resources, and virtual coaching for caregivers and children ages 0–12. Families can sign up online or through the BrightLife Kids app. No insurance, diagnosis, or referral is required.

For teens and young adults ages 13–25, California offers Soluna, a free mental health app where young people can chat with coaches, learn coping skills, journal, or join supportive community circles. Soluna is free, confidential, available in app stores, and does not require insurance.

CalHOPE also provides free emotional support to all Californians through a 24/7 support line at (833) 317-HOPE (4673), online chat, and culturally responsive resources.

Support at School — Where Kids Already Are

Schools are often the first place where emotional stress is noticed. Through the Children and Youth Behavioral Health Initiative (CYBHI), public schools, community colleges, and universities can offer therapy, counseling, crisis support, and referrals at no cost to families.

Services are available during school breaks and delivered on campus, by phone or video, or at community sites. There are no copayments, deductibles, or bills.

Medi-Cal Still Covers Everyday Care

Medi-Cal continues to cover everyday mental health care, including therapy for stress, anxiety, depression, or trauma; medication support; crisis stabilization; hospital care when needed; and referrals to community programs through county mental health plans and Medi-Cal health plans.

This ordinance amends portions of the City of Oakland's Vacant Property Tax, Oakland Municipal Code, Chapter 4.56. The Vacant Property Tax ordinance, originally approved by Oakland voters as Measure W in November 2018, imposes a special parcel tax on parcels deemed “vacant” in a calendar year, each year for twenty (20) years following the initial imposition of the tax. Parcels are deemed vacant if they, or in some situations permanent improvements built upon them, are not “in use” for at least fifty (50) days during the calendar year, and are not subject to any often (10) listed exemptions. This ordinance further adds an exemption for change of ownership on parcel if an “Arm's Length Transaction” takes place after a decision made on vacancy status; requires a hearing officer to include the findings of fact in their decisions; and establishes a statute of limitations for filing a petition to reverse the assessment or entitlement to exemption or seek refund of taxes paid to within 12 months from the due date of the second installment of the secured property tax bill.
